SAY "BAYER" when you buy Aspirin

Unless you see the name "Bayer" on package or on tablets, you are not getting the genuine Bayer product prescribed by physicians over twenty-two years and proved safe by millions for colds, headache, toothache, neuralgia, lumbago, rheumatism, neuritis, and for pain in general. Accept only "Bayer" package, which contains proper directions. Handy boxes of twelve tablets cost few cents. Druggists also sell bottles of 24 and 100. CARMACK'S SLAYER IS DEAD.

End Came at Nashville, Tenn., Last Week After Brief Illness.

A dispatch from Nashville, Tenn., says:

Funeral services for Col. Duncan R. Cooper, 79 years old, slayer of former United States Senator Edw. Carmack on the streets of this city in the fall of 1908, were held here yesterday (the 7th) at his old home in Ashwood, near Nashville. Col. Cooper died after a brief illness.

The tragic death of Carmack at the hands of Col. Cooper and his son, Robin Cooper, now dead, was the culmination of one of the bitterest political fights in the history of the State.

At the time Carmack was editor of the Nashville Tennessean, following his defeat in a Democratic primary by Malcolm R. Patterson, of Memphis, for the gubernatorial nomination. The Tennessean was waging a bitter editorial war on Governor Patterson, and the name of Col. Cooper, as one of the staunch friends and advisers of the Governor, had often appeared in the editorial columns.

Word was sent to Carmack by a mutual friend that Cooper would not countenance further public use of his name, it was stated. On the following day an editorial paragraph was written, in which sarcastic references were made to Cooper. The shooting of Carmack occurred on the following day.

The trial which followed was one of the bitterest in the annals of the State, resulting in a conviction of both Coopers, the elder getting a verdict of 20 years and his son a lesser term. An appeal was taken to the Supreme Court. The court affirmed the verdict in the case of Col. Cooper and gave the son a new trial. As soon as the decision of the court was announced, Governor Patterson issued a pardon for Duncan Cooper. Robin Cooper's case on retrial was dismissed for want of a prosecutor.

Robin Cooper met death under mysterious circumstances several years ago. His body, with the skull crushed, was found in a creek, beside which was found his umbrella, the interior covered with bloodstains. His slayers were never apprehended. There was believed to be no connection between the murder of the younger Cooper and the Carmack case.

OUR AGRICULTURE IN THE PIEDMONT.

(By Jas. L. Carberry.)

Passing as we are through one of the most critical periods in the history of South Carolina, economic values are of greater importance, and the conservation of our natural resources, eliminating small items of waste with well-directed effort, should impress all alike.

The cotton boll weevil and financial depression prevalent means radical changes in our general agricultural system and due consideration and preparation for which should have benefited us years ago.

We have too long practiced the one-crop system—thought and traded only in terms of cotton. Our natural resources and opportunities have been abused. Worst of all, we have practiced as a people systematic robbery from the hand upon which we rely for subsistence of the soil.

The extravagant use of commercial fertilizer has been a common practice—one from which no one can show soil improvement except where such plant food was used to produce plant life, to be returned in part or as a whole to the soil.

Had the bulk of money spent during the last twenty years for commercial fertilizers been applied to seeds of the various legumes, judiciously used, we would now be living in a veritable land of milk and honey, and would feel to a much less extent the demoralizing influences of the cotton boll weevil.

In an agricultural community especially there is no subject of such importance as soil building. Indeed, upon this and the control of soil moisture depends success and economic crop production.

Our soils of the Piedmont are subject to enormous losses through erosion, gullies—great avenues or channels through which our plant food and best soils pass to waste; graves for our soil fertility; profit-eaters—constituting a great source of loss which might be prevented.

Humus, or decaying vegetable matter, is the greatest storehouse of nitrogen, which is the most expensive constituent of plant food, and one which every farmer can and should grow in form of soil-building crops, of which there are a large number for summer and winter use.

The too common practice of using poor seed likewise causes large annual losses. Poor, inferior seed are dear at any price. It takes no more land or work for good seed and profits—other things being equal, or greater.

The common practice of exchanging or buying new seeds every few years is not very commendable. It is better to start with pure seed and keep them so by field and other selection.

There is a double opportunity for improvement with corn where reselection can be practiced in the bin. Retaining and planting seed of unknown merit for sentimental or other reasons is as a rule unprofitable. It is better for any community to first secure the best standard varieties of proven merit for the particular section, and all use the same. By this method larger yields can be produced and standards raised in addition to production of uniform grades in quantities and quality sufficient to command better market prices.

The careful and observant farmer who starts with good seeds of cotton can help himself greatly by carefully watching for off-type plants, bolls, etc. Discarding such plants and later selecting the very best individual plants in the field for breeding plot the following year, or planting seeds from each selection in separate row on uniform land, giving each selection and row a number, and at the end of the season weighing cotton from each row separately, retaining seeds from the outstandingly high yielding rows for increased plots the following year.

Corn has a wonderful tendency to mix. It is, therefore, of great importance that communities should co-operate in planting the same variety. Having done this, great benefits are possible by watching the tassels of the inferior stalks.

Field selection of seed corn should follow later, selecting the best ears from the best stalks which are normally spaced. Ears with long shanks or exposed ends, or which are too high or too low, should be avoided.

The foregoing are simple methods which would tend to help our agricultural advancement if practiced, and which can be done by any farmer profitably.

Mellon Wants More Laborers.

Washington, Nov. 9.—The proposal to modify immigration restrictions in order to provide the country with a greater supply of laborers has the approval of Secretary Mellon, it was said to-day at the treasury, although the secretary believes some means of selection should be devised so that more laborers might enter the country without a corresponding increase of other classes of immigrants.

Rising tides of prosperity in this country, according to Mr. Mellon's view, have caused a large shortage, which could be met by such a modification in the law. The labor shortage is held by him to be in a large measure for high prices.
